

The Effect on Humanity

This world can be liberated by performing genuine works of healing. – Meishusama IV, MK

According to Meishusama, our minds are interconnected with others through numerous spiritual cords. Taken together, this results in one huge interwoven field of consciousness—the collective consciousness of all of humanity. Biologist Rupert Sheldrake, author of A New Science of Life: The Hypothesis of Formative Causation, refers to these fields as ‘morphogenetic fields,’ or ‘form-generating fields.’ They are the collective memory and intelligence of the species. According to Dr. Sheldrake, each species of plant or animal has a unique, nonphysical memory bank that feeds it the information necessary to survive and reproduce, and which is the real source of their instinctual knowledge. The morphogenetic field is what informs fish on how to swim upstream, beavers how to build dams, and birds how to flock together in perfect formation. This field can be viewed as the biological equivalent of an electromagnetic field, one that determines the form and inherited behavior patterns of various species.

Dr. Sheldrake postulates that when a large enough percentage of a particular species learns a new skill or acquires new knowledge, it then automatically (through morphic resonance) becomes available to the entire species. Through this psychic networking, individual races and species are able to learn, grow, and adapt to changing circumstances. This principle has been referred to as “The Hundredth Monkey Effect.” Following this logic a step further, if enough people, beyond a certain threshold, evolve to a higher spiritual level, then possibly the entire human race may rise up to that new higher level as well.

In the entire process of cosmic evolution you see a spiritual process as well as a material process. You can’t separate the two. – Rupert Sheldrake, Ph.D., evolutionary biologist

Every time a person is healed of negativity or is raised to a higher level of consciousness, that person exerts a positive effect on the mental and behavioral aspects of this morphogenetic field. Thus, as each individual progresses, so too does everyone else. The Light from Jyorei, through its beneficial influence on millions of people, and therefore on this field, may be helping to purify and uplift all of humanity. In Meishusama’s terminology, we could say that everyone benefits from Jyorei, either directly or indirectly, through the spiritual cords that link us all together in an invisible web of relationships. Therefore, Jyorei is not just a gift to individuals, but also to humanity as a whole.

At its highest level, Jyorei is an experience of Oneness. When we give with love and receive with gratitude, we touch everyone through our shared collective awareness. Love and gratitude, empowered by divine Light, are capable of dissolving the inner barriers of alienation and separation that have troubled humanity for countless millennia. Through Jyorei, we can each help in the transmutation of this world into a realm of radiant beauty and Light.
